Keturah represents a wide range of clients facing state attorney general (AG) investigations and litigation, from entrepreneurial startups to Fortune 100 corporations. Efficient and results-oriented, Keturah helps her clients work successfully with AG offices and navigate complex regulatory landscapes to achieve outcomes aligned with their strategic business goals.

Keturah's industry experience encompasses hospitality, financial services, telecommunications, oil and gas, auto manufacturing, telemedicine, and personal services, among others. She represents companies of all sizes and at every stage in the business life cycle, from fledgling online operators to large financial institutions across a wide range of issues where AGs are likely to take interest, including consumer protection, data privacy and security, antitrust, and state and federal regulatory compliance. She advises and counsels clients in response to formal and informal inquiries, and guides clients through every step of the investigation process, including discovery and negotiations, and litigation and appeals where necessary. Keturah particularly enjoys assisting new and emerging businesses, for whom a state AG investigation can have game-changing consequences.

While in law school, Keturah completed legal internships in the chambers of Chief Judge Beryl A. Howell of the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, the Federal Programs Branch of the U.S. Department of Justice, and the Office of the Attorney General for the District of Columbia. She was also on the editorial board of The George Washington Law Review, and served as a teaching and research assistant to two former deans of The George Washington University Law School.

Keturah has an active pro bono practice primarily focused on sentencing issues, including resentencing for a client sentenced to life imprisonment as a juvenile. She frequently volunteers with community organizations throughout the District of Columbia as a member of the Junior League of Washington.
