

A Former Prosecutor Comes to the Defense of Cook County's Criminal Justice System [Crain's Chicago Business]

Friday, July 1, 2016

Dick Devine, of counsel in Criminal Defense and Internal Investigations practice, discusses Cook County's criminal justice system in Crain's Chicago Business. It is admittedly an imperfect system because human beings are involved. There are mistakes that should be corrected and some bad apples that should be removed. But the great majority of police officers, prosecutors and judges strive to see that those breaking the law, especially violent criminals, are held accountable for their misdeeds.
