Cozen O'Connor's Intellectual Property Department Continues to Rank Among Top Trademark Litigation Firms in the Country

Monday, October 8, 2018

Cozen O'Connor has been named among the top law firms for trademark litigation by Lex Machina, a LexisNexis Company, in its intellectual property analytics for 2018. Based on the nationwide data, Cozen O'Connor was among only a few firms that ranked in the top 20 representing both plaintiffs and defendants, placing in the top 12 representing trademark defendants and in the top 20 representing trademark plaintiffs. Lex Machina's first Top Law Firm Report for Selected Federal Litigation surveys each of Lex Machina's federal practice area modules in district court. For each practice area, the report examines the top 20 firms filing the most cases and the top 20 firms defending the most cases over 5 years of data, from January 2013 through December 2017.

"We are especially proud to appear among the top trademark firms for both plaintiffs and defendants," said Camille M. Miller, co-chair of Cozen O'Connor's Intellectual Property Department. "Our trademark litigators are among the best in the country and their success can be gauged by the strength of our clients' portfolios."

Cozen O'Connor's team of IP attorneys manages multimillion-dollar trademark portfolios and registers thousands of domestic and international trademarks each year. Our intellectual property attorneys conduct initial searches, file registrations, defend against objections, negotiate settlement agreements, record customs registrations, monitor unauthorized use, notify regulatory agencies, issues take-down notices and handle resulting litigation in federal courts all over the country. We work with all types of intellectual property: trademarks, trade names, domain names, service marks, copyrights, patents, trade secrets, franchise and related regulatory issues, and rights of publicity and privacy.