PHILADELPHIA, October 31, 2019 – Amanda DiChello, a member of Cozen O'Connor's Private Client Services Practice Group, has been selected as a Women of Distinction by the Philadelphia Business Journal. The award spotlights the region's most influential business women across a variety of industries, who've made a difference in their communities and are leaving a mark on Philadelphia businesses. The Philadelphia Business Journal received more than 250 nominations and narrowed the pool down to 30 honorees.

Amanda helps her clients navigate the legal and emotional intricacies that impact the preservation of family and personal wealth through multiple generations. She advises her clients on legal strategies to address family and monetary problems with an aim towards protecting her clients' assets and minimizing both their legal risks and their tax and other financial liabilities. If family discord leads to litigation, however, Amanda is an experienced and savvy advocate for her clients in matters associated with estate, trust, and fiduciary litigation. Her clients include high net worth individuals, beneficiaries, and families; private and charitable foundations; family offices; and individual and corporate fiduciaries. A substantial number of Amanda's clients are high net worth women who have either inherited significant wealth or who have independently built and grown significant wealth. Amanda understands the delicate interplay between the transition of wealth and the preservation of the family unit, through her work as an attorney advising high net worth individuals and families on estate, tax, and wealth planning and business succession planning matters.
